Faith alone

Why the oldest offense in the gospel is also the only rest that holds: you are saved by grace, through faith, not by what you manage to earn.

NOTE

Plainly, and held loosely

This one carries a man's faith, not a technique. It is written plainly and offered openly — a confession, not an argument to win.

THE CLAIM

Saved by grace, through faith

The claim of sola fide — faith alone — is that a person is made right with God as a gift received by trust, not as a wage earned by performance. Not faith plus a ledger of good deeds. Faith, resting on grace, full stop.

THE LEDGER

Why works can't save

If salvation were earned, you'd need to know the balance — and no honest person ever does. The standard isn't "better than most." Measured against a perfect God, the ledger never closes. A debt you can't total is a debt you can't pay.

> THE TURN
>
> The gospel isn't "try harder and hope." It's that the debt was paid by someone else, and your part is to stop pretending you could cover it and simply receive what's offered.

WHAT FAITH IS

Trust, not mere agreement

Faith here isn't agreeing that the facts are true the way you'd agree about history. It's trust — leaning your whole weight on the one who paid, the way you lean on a chair without first inspecting the joints.

LIVING IT

Freedom, not license

Grace received doesn't make a man reckless; it makes him free. Works don't earn the gift — they follow it, the way gratitude follows a rescue. You don't obey to be loved; you obey because you already are.

> I don't want to spend it, I want to save it — and the one thing already bought, I couldn't have afforded anyway.
